LOCAL PARAGRAPHS.

-The city council meets to-night. -Tracy's spelling bee to-night. To be or not to be among the orthographlets-that's the question. -One of the coal dealers is selling

Pittsburg coal at forty cents per barrel, he cheapest we know of in this market. -Charles Reade's last novel, Law and Lady, for twellty-five cents, at Mansford's. Call early and get a copy. -We understand that the improved reedle-guns and accoutrements for the Chickasaw Guards have arrived at Nashville, and await the requisition of Captain Duncan.

-Buffalo guats have killed quite a at and near each place.

-The Belleville Enterprise is the same of a new candidate for public favor. From the amount, character and arrangement of its contents, we are able to predict for it a long life of usefulness. Bell's Depot is a very important and growing town, with an annual trade amounting to five hundred thousand follars, and we think its inhabitants quite equal to the task of supporting a public organ.

-The Weekly Sunburst of Jackson, Mississippi, in its second number, just to hand, makes its appearance in its first-intended proportions and the editor says: "Let our countrymen but give us se encouragement, that an enterprise of this kind deserves, and we will prom ise them a first-class journal, devoted to peir teterests, as well as to the welfare all good citizens of our State and adopted country." The Irish people of emphis and the surrounding country Tennessee, North Alabams and Arkansas, will make a notice of this, and we hope, will respond to it generously.

AMUSEMENTS.

General Tracy's spelling Bee. General Tracy's orthographical tourn-ment, for the benefit of the orphaus, ommenced at the Theater last night. By eight o'clock a large number of laes and gentlemen had assembled, and only awaited the ap-pearance of the manager. By balf past eight o'clock General Tracy apnce, who cheered the orthographical minister as he walked modestly to the front of the stage. Hundreds of eyes ooked with awe and wonder upon this hero of the dictionary as he stepped within three feet of the footlights. Despite the strong reflected light of the gas, the eager, intouse stare of the adniring, wondering audience, the man of iron face, of flashing eyes, of comic genius, did not blush, but simply said that it could not be expected that be would afford all the fun for the even he therefore would call Leath, the presiding officer. elicited another cheer from the audience, but their gaze fell as harmess upon the immovable physiognomy of General Tracy whose orus of percepion gleamed brightly as calcium lights, as the warm sun rays upon the shell of an Arkansas turtle or the back of a Mississippi alligator. In fact General Tracy was au fait both in look and attitinde, for his dress was exactly as it should have been. This, however, did not annoy General Tracy, who summoned the following gentlemen and requested them to take seats upon the stage; captains, J. Harvey Mathes and U. W. Miller; umpires, George B. Peters, Horace E. Andrews and Henry Craft. THE ORTHOGRAPHICAL KNIGHTS. By this time the audience was quite othused, and there was not a little joy isible in the face of everyone within be theater. General Tracy then comnenced calling for volunteers, and for half an hour he invited all the bad cans quite patiently and persistently, be ucceeded in securing the worst spellers

He was glad to see that the gentlemen of the classes were now free and mayfree from all excitement. He would remind them that they did not use the rod pronouncing dictionary of three thou-rand words. He also had a bad cold, and therefore hoped they would give strict attention. He begged them, then, to articulate distinctly when they tried o spell. [Cheers.] THE CONTEST was then opened, the first gentleman, Knight Turner, as well as two others, spelling the words given them. Knight Paten was asked to spell "acetic," but owing to its pronunciation from that TROTTING WAGON—An elegant trouting-be seen at Woodruff & (No. 8 april: it "secetic," and was led to the foot of I as add down on Williamson's map of the city.

Sir Knight Paton was adjudged correct when he said "conferible" although it is "conferrable," as the former word is not in the dictionary. Sir Knight Walk was somewhat out of order in having a philological argument with Mr. Les 's, and at one time it looked as if the matter would become serious. He finally said "pros-sess" and this ended his "process." Sir Knight Hanson was too "irresistable," while Knight A. Meriwether forgot to out an "e" in the second syllable of "eleemosynary," thereby leaving Sir Knight Moore victor of the field, with no more to contend with. The enter-tainment was then ended but will be resumed to-night. It was interesting, it from no other cause, insamuch as it was novel in its character. Mr. Leath did not pronounce the words as they are usually heard. The number of scientific and techhe pleasure or interest of the occasion, and hereafter they should not be given.
